EVCGroupNo: 10 GroupName: Rainforests

EVCSubGroupNo: 10.1 SubGroupName: Rainforests

CCMA

EVCType: EVC

RegDescription: On the southern fall of the Otway Ranges Cool Temperate Rainforest occurs in steeply dissected gullies and valleys, which represent the wettest and most sheltered niches available. It occupies extensive Riverine terraces. On the northern fall of the Ranges this EVC is restricted to the headwaters of streams near the main divide where rainfall is highest and cloud cover most persistent. Altitudes are low and average annual rainfall is high. Generally soils are deep, well structured, reddish clays and sandy clay loams high in organic content, but on alluvial terraces they are chocolate brown to grey silts and silty clay loams. The overstorey is usually well developed Myrtle Beech to 30m tall. The understorey is dominated by a dense canopy of Soft Tree-fern along with a diversity of understorey trees and tall, mesic shrubs including Prickly Currant-bush, Austral Mulberry, Banyalla, Musk Daisy-bush and Blackwood. The rare Slender Tree-fern and rare Skirted Tree-fern are also commonly present. This EVC is characterized by the diversity and abundance of obligate epiphytes and species that are epiphytic at crucial stages in their life cycle. This includes vascular species (predominantly ferns) and non-vascular species (mosses, liverworts and lichens). The usual epiphytic substrates are the caudexes ('trunk' or stem) of Soft tree-fern and the trunks of Myrtle Beech. Epiphytic ferns are particularly prominent and include Leathery Shield-fern, Kangaroo Fern, Austral Filmy Fern, Shiny Filmy Fern, Common Filmy Fern, Narrow Filmy Fern, Common Finger-fern, Weeping Spleenwort, Mother Spleenwort, the rare Ground Spleenwort and Veined Bristle-fern. The ground stratum is dominated by ground ferns with the occasional forb. Ferns include Mother Shield-fern, Ray Water-fern, Lance Water-fern, Austral Lady-fern and the rare Bristly Shield-fern. Shade Nettle is commonly present. Cool Temperate Rainforest in the Otway Ranges contains a number of Nationally and Statewide listed rare and vulnerable species.
